Why would anyone trust that guy?

- Over 10 years of experience working as a new media producer

- Founded/co-founded three successful businesses

- Produced/co-produced over 100 projects for clients in Canada, the US, and the UK

What have I learned over the last 10 years?

We must work together to succeed!

As a council tenant, working, I am very uneasy about this. I have read the council's arguments in favour of transfer and they make sense in some ways, but reading between the lines I just know that, whatever happens, I'm going to be worse off. Until I get a guarantee that rents won't double under private management I'm voting firmly NO.

Curious exchange of e-mails -- until one sees the full correspondence and take into account the context and background of the various participants (including the editorial stance of both papers), one can understand the difficulties of deciding which way to vote.

Marcus: I think you need to specify the time-scale for rents to double up before you firmly vote either way.

If only we all could take into account the context and background...but it seems that everyone following the transfer process is in the know, and that those who are not directly involved in some way, don't need to know. There's a lot at stake here, and the decision makers appear to reveal information on a need to know basis, and this means those on both sides of the debate. So much for 'citizen participation' then.

Come on guys, let's have the lowdown. Why is there not enough cash in the council coffers to fund the decent homes standard? Someone suggested to me it was Dennis Healey's mistake in the 1970s - was it?

And rents will go up as a consequence of living under capitalism, it doesn't matter who the landlord is - except that when the landlord is a

Ungana Afrika Research Project: Capacity Building And Tech Support In Africa NGOs

Gunner | 23 Feb 2006 - 12:45 » Community | Organizations and Networks

Rudi von Staden at Ungana Afrika is starting a research project looking into different ways that ICT students or recent graduates can be engaged to provide capacity building and technology support to NGOs and Small to Medium Sized Enterprises (SMEs) in Africa. If you are personally involved in one, or know of other projects that he can contact to participate in the research, please contact them via http://www.ungana-afrika.org/projects/sdp.htm , which also provides more information on the project.

Idealware Donation Tools Review

Katrin | 16 Nov 2005 - 11:25 » Community | Software Applications for NGOs

Our friend and colleague Laura Quinn at Idealware reviewed twenty-seven lower-priced online software tools that accept donations from an existing website. She found that many affordable tools are also powerful, friendly, and flexible. She offers in the report recommendations for high-quality tools, as well as a method to choose the right tool for you. ☀ I'm going to Web of Change September 20-24th, 2006

Welcome to the Web of Change Wiki

Welcome to the Web of Change Wiki (generously donated to us again this year by our friends at Socialtext). From here you can:

- Take an introductory tour of the Socialtext Workspace, start here.
- Visit Recent Changes to see what's new, and see help for tips to use this Workspace.
- Make links by putting words or phrases in square brackets. Click on Edit This Page to see some examples.

Web of Change is an annual summit connecting leaders at the convergence of online communications, technology, and social change. It's happening September 20th - 24th, 2006. Please see the Web of Change Web site for general conference info.

This is the place to look for information on logistics on getting to and from Hollyhock, the agenda and session development, topics and themes that will be explored this year, and pre- and post-Web of Change information.

Here's are some quick links to get you started:
